

Here is a frozen recreation of the world's largest sand dollar. In front of our very own Academic Offices Building, we have minted a giant replica coin currency of the ocean. Much like our world on land, millions of dollars are used, created or expensed every day under the sea! Fish from all bodies of water use the sand dollar to stimulate their economy by buying seaweed sandwiches, herring hockey tickets or fishbowls at the underwater Ambassador just to name a few. Certainly without the almighty sand dollar, there would be a commotion from the depths of the ocean.

We, the students from the School of Business and Economics, hope the waves of good fortune take us to the dollars one day. Upon graduation, our own currents will carry us all away to different cities and different companies in hopes of finding happiness. With the same hard work used to build this statue, we'll earn a living through Business. Like the billions of sand grains in the oceans we too will be making dollars.
